

Xavier Veilhan

Born in 1963, France

Lives and works in Paris, France

Since the late 1980s, Xavier Veilhan has been engaged in delivering various possibilities of representation through his wide range of works, spanning painting, sculpture, installation, photography and film. The artist incorporates various techniques and materials from his environment to generate a unique artistic language. He completes these works by experimenting with different techniques and materials, attempting to perfect an initial idea of shape and color through the actualisation of the work. Rather than conveying political or ideological messages, the artist puts more emphasis on the visual effect of his artworks. In expressing his world through his oeuvre, he creates digital images, sculpture, films, and exhibitions as a means of communication. It is the artist's belief that understanding the intricacy of the world and recognizing possible delineations within continuation are the purpose of his work as well as the broader meaning of art.

Veilhan's work frequently features people around him including architects and artists. He scans his models, transforming them into three-dimensional visual products, then magnifies or represents them using an automated mechanical process with materials such as polyurethane. Through this process, the artist aims to discover the veiled existence of underlying implications by projecting existential values onto a depersonalized product. Here, he also focuses on the corporeal existence that a figure possesses.

The artist puts emphasis on the fact that artworks interact spiritually with the audience and hence takes note on how viewers perceive his works. He tries to organize his exhibitions in a way that the audience can reflect upon their own existence rather than merely appreciate a piece of work. In order to share and communicate with the wider public, he continues to present his works in prominent art institutions as well as public spaces around the world.

Xavier Veilhan represented the French Pavilion at the Venice Biennale 2017 through his work Studio Venezia. He has also held solo exhibitions at 313 Art Project (2024, 2019, 2014); Abbaye de Cluny, France (2016); Palais de Tokyo, Paris (2014); MAMO SYSTEMA OCCAM, Marseille (2013); VDL Research House, Los Angeles (2012) and Chateau de Versailles, Versailles (2009). He has also participated in group exhibitions held in world-renowned institutions including Fondation EDF, Paris (2017); Museo de Bellas Artes de Bilbao (2016); Mori Art Museum, Tokyo (2015); MNAM-Centre Georges Pompidou, Paris (2015); and National Museum of Modern and Contemporary Art (2014).
